

Ashes and Bushes
There was once a Merchant,
Whose tools are bathed in ashes
and he would spend days sleeping in bushes.
His face is pale
and his breath smells like ale, Yet he didn't smoke
nor he drank coke.
He often speaks nonsense
in past tense.

Bruffeld Telltales

[A New Mythology for the Aquarian Era]

In the beginning, there is only the darkness. An egg appears in the universe one day. Out of it, a Creator deity arises. This deity is none other than the mighty Adravachakrum. He floats in the void for several weeks. One day, he felt that something is missing. "Let there be light," said him. A ray of light pierced the darkness from the heavens above. It was followed by several stars forming out of dust. On the second day, the deity wondered why there isn't other living beings. Plants began to appear in his hair, feeling itchy, the almighty decided to create a piece of land. He buried those plants in the ground. On the third day, the almighty walked in the land, seeing that it was barren, he divided the land into continents. Islands, small grass and trees began to appear out of the ground and grow towards the sun. On the fourth day, the almighty was swimming in the ocean. He noticed that something is missing. The kelp covered the sea floor but it isn't a being of mobility. Various sculptures are made from sand and all sorts of sea beasts came to being. Some of them began to eat each other. On the fifth day, he observed the sea beasts and brought some to the land above the ocean. They died and their remains were buried in the ground. From their tombs, small animals crawled out. They ate of many shapes and sizes. On the sixth day, the lord felt uneasy seeing the flat landscape. He picked up boulders from underground and stacked them to form mountains. The top of the mountain melted and became magma due to the heat of the sun. The liquid flowed down through small cracks in the boulders. On the seventh day, the lord wanted someone to talk with him. He took two ape cadavers and grafted clay onto them. "Let there be perfection!" exclaimed the lord. Two humans breathed for the first time. One of them is a male while the other one is female. The lord called them 'Yakub' and 'Lia'. He told them to eat and drink anything they want except from their own kind. The lord flew away and created a third human from clay. This human was called 'Ame' and has the features of both previous humans. Unlike before, this human wasn't told about what to eat by the lord. The three humans were found together doing forbidden things and the lord sent them away in a raft. They arrived in the new land in the next day and continued doing their usual things. Their population increased as days passed by. Seeing this, the lord is content and he left for heaven.

In the days of old, there lived a wise king on the continent of Charumaken. He was loved by his people due to his benevolent rule. One day, the king passed away when sleeping. The ministers intended to choose the eldest son of the late king as the new monarch. The first son was as wise as his father. However, he went missing after one week of ruling the kingdom due to a hunting accident. The second son became the next ruler of the nation. He is a tyrant and his rule is marked with bribery. Nobody dared to speak up against him until one day. That day, the king held a festival to celebrate springtime. A beggar walked towards the king. "Who is that fellow? Guards, take him away!" The king got ignored by his guards and was stabbed multiple times before falling to the ground. The citizens rejoiced upon seeing the tyrant's death. The beggar is nominated as the regent of the kingdom. Elsewhere, the former wise king has wandered around a large jungle for years. His clothes are ragged and smelly. Petra, an earth goddess, found the former monarch and took him to her hill. The hill was filled with flowers and wheat. The former monarch spent the rest of his days there. The regent felt tired after ruling the nation for several decades. He led an expedition to bring back the former king to his homeland. They found the corpse of the former king in a hill and buried it there. The crew of the expedition returned with empty hands to their fatherland. Many months later, the regent fell sick and choosed his son as the new king. He died with a smile on his face.

Once upon a time, there dwells a fisherman at the islands of Kroshogu. He has good relationships with his neighbours due to him often giving excess fish to nearby families. One day, he caught a bottle containing a scroll. The scroll is written as a plea for help. The fisherman rowed his boat to the direction where the letter came from. He spotted a monk eating a coconut on an isolated island. The monk is very happy to see the fisherman. He walked towards the sailor and told him that his ship was destroyed while he was going on a pilgrimage and he got washed on the waves before getting stuck on the tiny island. The fisherman and the monk went back to the fisherman's village. They had a huge feast. When the monk is leaving, he gave the fisherman a brass kettle and a golden teapot. The fisherman thanked the monk and went back to his house. He rubbed the teapot and a genie came out. The genie thanked him and gave him wealth before vanishing.
